

Repair or Replace?

Summer is synonymous with baseball games, beach outings, and high air conditioning costs. While we Angelinos love our sunshine state, we also hate the cost associated with running our air conditioning units. Although costs are deviated by changing your filters regularly and by having a friendly neighborhood HVAC contractor such as Air Pros maintain your units, it still might not be enough.

Is it time to replace? When considering a new system, it is not only cooling or heating that you are buying but comfort, savings, and peace of mind. Additionally, with the federal and utility incentives offered, there is no better time to replace your heating and cooling system than now. To ease the decision making, here are sure signs your system is due for replacement:

- Is your system over 15 years old? If so, you are probably paying too much in energy running cost.
- Are you constantly calling your local HVAC contractor for repairs? If you have paid a pretty penny to repair your unit, you should not be forced to call for more repairs shortly after.

- Is your outdoor condenser too loud? The last thing you want to hear is the jibber-jabber of an outdoor condenser.
- Are your utility bills high? This means your system has become less efficient.
- Are you constantly sneezing at home? This may be a result of poor indoor air quality and excessive dust.

Replacing your old heating and cooling equipment with new, energy-efficient models is a great start. But to make sure that you get the best performance, the new equipment must be properly installed. Improper installation can reduce system efficiency by up to 30%, costing you more on utility bills and possibly shortening the equipment's life. By hiring a great HVAC contractor like Air Pros it will ensure that your unit is sized properly and installed impeccably, and they will assist you in selecting the best system and answer all of your questions. Most importantly, they are a contractor whose first priority is your complete satisfaction.
